150 ACRES OF HERITAGE

Faith Island is the kind of holding that almost never comes to market — 150 acres of forested river island with a storied past: seasonal hunting and fishing grounds of the Penobscot Nation, a navigational landmark for early settlers, and a guide point for the great nineteenth-century timber drives floating down the

THE ISLAND

A Legacy Island on the Penobscot

At the edge of Maine's North Woods, where the East Branch of the Penobscot meets the West Branch near Medway, Faith Island rises from the river as 150 acres of unbroken forest. Pine and spruce crowd the shoreline, hidden coves tuck into the banks, and the water runs dark and quiet past the island's flanks. Katahdin Country spreads out behind it — mountain air, big sky, and a landscape that has barely changed in a century.

THE WATERS

River, Cove, and Landing

The island is ringed by a beautifully sheltered stretch of river: gentle banks, hidden coves, and calm water made for easy boat launching and secure vessel mooring. Despite the total seclusion, the mainland is only a short, scenic boat ride away — provisions, fuel, and regional services stay completely within reach in every season.

THE CAMP

A Classic Maine Camp

At the heart of the island stands a classic Maine log cabin: a warm great room with a wood stove, antler mounts, and log walls, a dining room made for long evenings, and a comfortable bedroom. An enclosed screened porch opens to the woods — the traditional North Woods way of living with the forest, whatever the weather.

THE SETTING

Privacy in Every Direction

From the island's shores there is nothing to see but trees, water, and sky. No neighbours, no roads, no noise — only the river's own quiet and 150 acres of forest to walk, hunt, and fish. With mainland power at the island, the camp stays comfortable deep into shoulder seasons, making this as much a year-round retreat as a summer escape.

TERRAIN

Land and Water

One hundred and fifty acres of spruce and pine forest, threaded with a woodland trail and edged by the Penobscot's dark water. Deer, moose, eagle, and trout country — a hunter's and angler's island that rewards those who want to disappear into the North Woods and own a piece of it outright.

KNOWN FOR

A 150-acre legacy river island on the East Branch of the Penobscot — historic Penobscot Nation hunting and fishing grounds and a logging-era landmark, with a classic Maine log camp, mainland power, and a short boat ride to the mainland.

ARRIVAL

A Short Boat Ride

Reach Faith Island by boat: drive to the mainland launch, then a short, scenic ride across the river to the island's coves. Millinocket's municipal airfield is minutes away by road, and Bangor International Airport is about an hour's drive south — an easy journey for a holding this remote.

UTILITIES

Serviced and Self-Reliant

The island benefits from mainland power, so the camp runs on proper electricity rather than generators alone. The sheltered riverfront offers excellent boat launching and secure mooring, and the forest holds timber, trail, and building potential for a buyer who wants to shape a family compound or a sporting estate.

OWNERSHIP

Lifestyle and Value

Maine is the United States' home of unspoiled island ownership: full freehold title with the same rights as any local owner, backed by a reliable island registry — a secure, privacy-valuing market. Islands of 150 acres on the Penobscot simply do not trade often; Faith Island is a collector's holding, priced by inquiry for the buyer who understands what that means.
